In 2005, an internal LAPD assault audit found that 11% of minor assaults should have been classified as serious assaults, artificially lowering violent crime rates. The LAPD delayed the release of this audit until 2011.

In 2015, the Office of the Inspector General released a report revealing the Los Angeles Police Department had underreported over 25,000 assault crimes between 2008 and 2014. The underreported crimes increased aggravated assault crime rates by over 30% annually.
